March 2015 at BFI Southbank

BFI Flare LGBT Film Festival launches, Katharine Hepburn and Eric Rohmer seasons continue, plus seasons dedicated to avant-garde Czech film director Věra Chytilová and pioneering TV producer Jenny Barraclough

With onstage appearances from Jimmy McGovern, Russell Tovey, Julian Rhind-Tutt, MyAnna Buring, Kim Longinotto and Jenny Barraclough

- 19 – 29 March 2015 BFI Flare: London LGBT film festival, one of the world’s leading LGBT film events, now in its 29th year, presents the best of new queer cinema from around the world at BFI Southbank, alongside a packed programme of events, discussions, archive screenings and more. The full programme is released on 18 February, when press accreditation also opens. Booking will open for BFI members on 25 February and to the public on 2 March.

- BFI Southbank’s two month season dedicated to one of Hollywood’s most iconic actresses, Katharine Hepburn continues with part two running until 19 March 2015. Featuring the continuation of an extended run of The Philadelphia Story (1940), re-released by the BFI in selected cinemas across the UK from February 13, plus classic films from later in her career such as The Lion in Winter (1968), On Golden Pond (1981) and Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner (1967).

- BFI Southbank concludes its focus on one of film’s most consistently rewarding artists, French New Wave director Eric Rohmer. The final part of this comprehensive retrospective includes some of Rohmer’s most ambitious, audacious and personal films including Rendezvous in Paris (1995), Triple Agent (2004) and Rohmer’s final film, The Romance of Astréa and Celadon (2007).

- March will see a season dedicated to the late avant-garde Czech film director, Věra Chytilová, who, though credited as a pioneer of Czech cinema, was banned from making films by the Czechoslovakian government in the 1960’s for six years. The season will include such films as Daisies (1966) The Journey (2004) and Ceiling (1961).

- March’s TV season is dedicated to Jenny Barraclough, one of the first female producers to work in British television. The season will include titles such as the BAFTA-winning Man Alive: Gale Is Dead (BBC 1970), And the Queen Passed By... (BBC 1983), offering a fascinating glimpse behind the scenes of a Royal Tour, and Mr Attenborough and Mr Gandhi (BBC 1983), an incisive insight into what drove Richard Attenborough to make his epic, Ghandi. This will be followed by a special ‘in conversation’ with Barraclough who will be interviewed by renowned documentary filmmaker, Roger Graef.
• Film previews include Gregg Araki’s White Bird in a Blizzard (2014) and Chris Rock’s Top Five (2014), plus a special International Women’s Day screening of Kim Longinotto’s Dreamcatcher (2015), which will be followed by a Q&A with the director.

• There will also be a TV preview of writer Jimmy McGovern’s new series Banished, inspired by the events of 1788 when Britain established a penal colony in New South Wales. Stars Julian Rhind-Tutt, Russell Tovey and MyAnna Buring with join McGovern, producer Sita Williams and director Dan Percival for a post-screening Q&A.

• The Family Programme in March will include a very special Funday Preview of Home (2015), an intergalactic animation featuring Rihanna, Jim Parsons and Steve Martin; plus there will be screenings of Disney’s animated classic Pinocchio (1940) and Mukhsin (2006), a refreshing take on the universal themes of friendship and love from Malaysia.

• The BFI’s regular Sonic Cinema strand will team up with MUTEK and ELEKTRA, two vibrant organisations from Québec, to present a bold and ambitious series of live audiovisual performances, featuring 8 UK Premieres over two consecutive nights.

• BFI Southbank’s new Cult programme strand continues in March with a tribute to the ‘Godfather of Gore’, Italian shockmeister Lucio Fulci. Though best known for the grandiose horror films that defined the latter part of his career, this month’s Cult screening will be one of Fulci’s forgotten classics; the western, Four of the Apocalypse (1975).

• Further highlights include extended runs of Powell and Pressburger’s newly restored The Tales of Hoffman (1951) and Alain Renais’ final film Life of Riley (2014) which won the Silver Bear at the Berlinale, just weeks before he died.

• Our new Audience Choice slot will, inspired by the Katharine Hepburn season, screen a film featuring an iconic strong woman, as chosen by our audience via the BFI website (www.bfi.org.uk/audiencechoice); meanwhile BFI Members will have a chance to see Ivan Reitman’s cult classic Ghostbusters (1984) on the big screen in the monthly Member Picks slot.

KATHERINE HEPBURN

Katharine Hepburn was a brilliantly versatile actress who could handle serious drama or the lightest of comedies with a rare grace and charm, but she was best at portraying a new kind of fiercely independent woman. Her career spanned over sixty years and she won four Oscars® for acting, a record which is yet to be bettered.

Part two of the season covers the period when, with her ‘box office poison’ reputation far behind her, Hepburn delivered some of her best work. Playing spinsters, as she did in Summertime (1955), suited her – ‘It wasn’t difficult for me to play those women, because I’m the maiden aunt,’ she said – but her range remained wide. It was her performance as a mother in Long Day’s Journey Into Night (1962) that she considered the finest of her career to date. A break followed, to care for Spencer Tracy in his final illness, but Hepburn returned to further acclaim. Ever one to buck trends, she won three more Oscars®, for Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner (1967), The Lion in Winter (1968) and On Golden Pond (1981), at a time of life when many actresses face declining opportunities.
This dynamic talent blazed a trail for Hollywood women and gave us a delightful screen legacy. Without Katharine Hepburn, it’s likely classical Hollywood would have seen far fewer autonomous, intelligent, self-determining female characters. Hepburn fought for her roles to mean something, and would no more play the shrinking violet on screen than she could in life. Whether as a confounding screwball minx in George Cukor’s deathless comedies, a hot-tempered foil to her real-life love Spencer Tracy in their warm and witty battle-of-the-sexes stand-offs, or as a wise, spirited matriarch in her rich run of later performances, Hepburn remains a uniquely challenging and lively screen presence.

ERIC ROHMER

BFI Southbank concludes its celebration of the work of one of film’s most consistently rewarding artists, Eric Rohmer. The final part of the three month retrospective season focuses on the last films that Rohmer made before his death in 2010 and includes some of the director’s most ambitious, audacious and personal films including Rendezvous in Paris (1995), Triple Agent (2004) and Rohmer’s final film, The Romance of Astréa and Celadon (2007).

Like his nouvelle vague colleagues (especially Godard), Rohmer – born Maurice Schérer – had a personal mission. For him, film was the ideal art form for engaging with reality, particularly the inner world of feelings and thoughts. Subtly counterpointing words, gestures, glances and actions, his witty, affecting tales of intelligent, articulate, recognisably ‘ordinary’ people trying to fathom what kind of life and lover they’d like are psychologically astute and profoundly compassionate.

Co-author of a study of Hitchcock, he was adept at suspense; well-versed in the arts, he made his stories of longing and seduction resonate in all sorts of ways. Throughout, Rohmer achieved a rare consistency of subject, tone and quality; like Godard or Ozu, he effectively invented his own genre.

Early in his career, he formed his own company to retain control over his work; working to a low budget, shooting on location with a tiny crew, he composed endlessly inventive variations on a range of themes. His warm, respectful interest in his characters, notwithstanding their flaws, means that his films are a celebration of life in all its mysterious, sensuous, sometimes absurd glory.

VĚRA CHYTILOVÁ

The late great avant-garde Czech film director Věra Chytilová is often credited as a pioneer of Czech cinema; throughout her almost forty year career her remarkable and inventive approach to filmmaking has produced a body of work which invariably focuses on women rebelling against a male-dominated order. Chytilová is perhaps best known for her neo-dadaist farce Daisies (1966), in which two teenage girls embark on a series of destructive pranks. Chytilová’s work was condemned as experimental and pessimistic following the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 and she was banned from the studios for six years. In 1976, due to the low cinema attendance Chytilová was approached by the government to begin directing films through one of the state run production companies and she returned to cinema with the commercially successful The Apple Game (1976).
Though she was continually met with controversy and heavy censorship by the Czechoslovakian government Chytilová continued to challenge the values of both normalised ‘socialism’ and the new capitalism. The season will include screenings of rarely seen early work Ceiling (1961) and A Bagful of Fleas (1962), plus Daisies, The Apple Game and more. The season will be complemented by an atrium exhibition The Fruit of Paradise, in which audiences can explore Chytilová’s working process, as illustrated by her most stylised work, the film ‘opera’ The Fruit of Paradise (1969). This special display reveals the individual layers of the final film via trial prints and photographs which were newly discovered in the estate of Chytilová’s husband, cameraman Jaroslav Kučera.

JENNY BARRACLOUGH
One of the first female producers to work in British television, the season focuses on a selection of films which helped mark the highly acclaimed and multi award winning documentarian Jenny Barracloough as a filmmaker who ventured into new territories with compassion and humour. The season will include a screening of the ground-breaking and BAFTA Award winning Gale Is Dead (1970), about a young girl destroyed by early rejection which moved politicians to act on the state of the care system. Also screening will be Mr Attenborough and Mr Gandhi (1983), the unusually revealing look at the business of movie making, interspersed with incisive insights into what drove director Richard Attenborough to make his epic, Ghandi; following which, Jenny Barracloough will be welcomed onto the BFI stage for a special illustrated in conversation event with renowned documentary filmmaker Roger Graef.

Matinees and talks for the over 60s

Seniors’ Free Matinee: Children + intro and discussion
UK 1976. Dir Terence Davies. With Phillip Mawdsley, Nick Stringer, Valerie Lilley. 43min. 15
The first film of an auteur often contains everything that is to come. That’s certainly true of Children, a fictional short in which a young man recalls his childhood in working class Liverpool. An unbroken flow of direct and haunting images, occasionally frozen into tableaux, is often accompanied by silence or music replacing natural sound. With Children Davies invites us to look, to listen and to feel. He called it an ‘apprentice’ piece: some apprentice! Mamoun Hassan, commissioner of the film, and Terence Davies (work permitting) will join us for a discussion.

ESSENTIAL EXPERIMENTS
Exploring experimental cinema and artists’ film

New Films by Nathaniel Dorsky + intro by independent film curator Mark Webber
It’s difficult to put into words the feeling of serenity and wonder that Dorsky’s films evoke. Often shot at the reduced speed of 18 frames per second (‘the sacred speed’ as he calls it), the works invite intense, meditative engagement with the richness of the material world around us, both in its stillness and its interconnectivity. Sumptuous plant life, the natural environment and manmade structures are all carefully framed, and beautifully lit by the sun. Dorsky has been making films for nearly 50 years. These new 16mm titles present carefully crafted responses to specific moments spent in and around his home of San Francisco.

Rediscovered British features

The Reluctant Widow + intro by Jo Botting, Curator, BFI National Archive
UK 1950. Dir Bernard Knowles. With Jean Kent, Guy Rolfe, Julian Dallas. 85min. 35mm. U

‘Shootings, skirmishes and scandals!’ exclaims Elinor, bemoaning her transformation from hard-up governess to widow and heiress in just a few days. Jean Kent brings humour and sensuality to the role of the accidental heroine who climbs into the wrong carriage, and finds herself immersed in a web of intrigue. This Regency romp is the only British screen adaptation of popular novelist Georgette Heyer, and the writers revel in the overblown dramatics and risqué elements of the plot. Kent has a definite twinkle in her eye as she defends her honour against several would-be seducers, while Rolfe and Dallas make first-class bounders.

PASSPORT TO CINEMA
A thematic journey through film

History Is Made in the Dark
‘We wanted to join the romantic adventure and the film of ideas,’ director Gillo Pontecorvo said of Queimada, the story of a Caribbean rebellion-turned-counter-revolution for English colonialism. History as romance and history re-examined are two sides of our current season; Peter Watkins’ quasi-documentary of the brutal Battle of Culloden is another. All the President’s Men is both document and romance of Watergate, with a battle between light and darkness (the Washington Post newsroom vs Washington DC).

Queimada! Burn! + intro by Richard Combs, tutor/programmer NFTS
Italy-France 1968. Dir Gillo Pontecorvo. With Marlon Brando, Evaristo Márquez, Renato Salvatori, Norman Hill. 132min. 35mm. EST. 12A

Based on a slave uprising in Guadalupe in the 1860s, Queimada! borrows the name of American filibuster William Walker, transforming him into an effete Englishman. Sent to the (fictional) island of Queimada, Walker (Brando) foments revolution to serve Britain’s interests, but returns 10 years later to suppress the movement he helped start. Pontecorvo uses part fact, part fiction, to expose an historic truth.

Forgotten Faces
UK 1961. Dir Peter Watkins. 18min. 16mm. 15

Culloden
UK 1964. Dir Peter Watkins. 75min. 15

The War Game
UK 1966. Dir Peter Watkins. 45min. 12A

A triple bill of early work by Peter Watkins, one of cinema’s great provocateurs, that takes in the past, near-present and future: Forgotten Faces recreates the Hungarian revolution on the streets of Canterbury; Culloden is an as-it-happens faux documentary about the Jacobean uprising; The War Game (banned for 20 years by the BBC) is a haunting film about the aftermath of nuclear war.

All the President’s Men + intro by Dominic Power, Head of Screen Arts, NFTS
USA 1976. Dir Alan J Pakula. With Robert Redford, Dustin Hoffman, Jason Robards, Jack Warden. 138min. 35mm. 15
William Goldman’s script distils Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein’s epic account of Watergate and their own role in it, while Pakula paints a backdrop of the glare of the newsroom and the shadowy world of Washington. Made when the events of Watergate were still raw, All the President’s Men provides a view of modern history that suggests the paranoids were right all along.

The mind-altering and unclassifiable
Four of the Apocalypse Quattro dell’Apocalisse
Italy 1975. Dir Lucio Fulci. With Fabio Testi, Tomas Milian, Lynne Frederick, Michael J Pollard, Harry Baird. 104min. EST
Of Fulci’s three forays into the western genre, Four of the Apocalypse is undoubtedly the most impressive, proudly showcasing his unruly approach to narrative and affection for eye-popping violence. A gambler, a prostitute, an alcoholic and a gravedigger flee a vigilante attack on their frontier town, only to find themselves at the mercy of a sadistic outlaw named Chaco.
