The Ozu Collection
The Student Comedies
Four silent comedies by Yasujiro Ozu

The BFI is adding four rare films by Yasujiro Ozu to its ongoing collection of the Japanese master’s work, which will eventually include all 32 of the surviving films he made for the Shochiku Studio. This handsome 2-disc box set brings Ozu’s student-themed silent comedies to DVD for the first time, and includes newly commissioned scores by Ed Hughes as well as the rare surviving fragments of his 1929 film I Graduated, But …

Disc One:
Days of Youth (Wakaki Hi)
Ozu’s earliest surviving film, from 1929, follows students Watanabe and Yamamoto as they unknowingly compete for the affections of the same girl.

I Flunked, But … (Rakudai Wa Shita Keredo)
With exams looming, Takahashi finds a creative way to avoid doing his revision in this roguish comedy reminiscent of Harold Lloyd’s The Freshman.

Japan / 1929 + 1930 / black and white / silent, Japanese intertitles with English subtitles / DVD9 / 99 mins + 63 mins / Original aspect ratio 1.33:1

Disc Two:
The Lady and the Beard (Shukujo To Hige)
Graduate Okajima finds that his impressive beard, worn in traditional style, makes it impossible to find a decent job or make a good impression. Ozu’s cheerful comedy focuses on the tension between tradition and modernity, a theme he revisited in some of his most profound post-war work.

Where Now are the Dreams of Youth? (Seishun No Yume Ima Izuko)
Hirano and his friends are happily enjoying a carefree college life, but when tragedy strikes everything changes. Scripted by Ozu’s long-term collaborator Kogo Noda, this film subtly moves from light to dark and questions the durability of friendship.

Japan / 1931 + 1932 / black and white / silent, Japanese intertitles with English subtitles / DVD9 / 72 mins + 82 mins / Original aspect ratio 1.33:1
