ANTONIONI: CONFRONTING THE MODERN WORLD WITH STYLE

BFI SOUTHANK, 1 JANUARY – 27 FEBRUARY 2019

Wednesday 12 December 2018, London.
Arriving in London after a world tour, produced by Luce Cinecittà, ANTONIONI: CONFRONTING THE MODERN WORLD WITH STYLE will be a major season dedicated to the groundbreaking director Michelangelo Antonioni, running at BFI Southbank from Tuesday 1 January – Sunday 24 February. A former critic, Antonioni quickly established himself with a striking series of features notable for their visual elegance, narrative subtlety and fascination with people striving to find satisfaction in the modern world. This season offers audiences an opportunity to discover the work of this titan of European art-house cinema.

There will be screenings of acclaimed films such as L’avventura (1960), L’eclisse (1962), Blow up (1966), Zabriskie Point (1970) and The Passenger (1975), the latter of which will be re-released in selected cinemas by the BFI on Friday 4 January. A highlight of the extensive events programme will be a number of onstage appearances from actor and assistant director Enrica Fico Antonioni, the director’s widow, who will introduce screenings of Red Desert (1964) and Identification of a Woman (1982) and take part in a Q&A following a screening of Beyond the Clouds (1995). She will also introduce a shorts programme of films from 1983-2004 many of which she collaborated on with Antonioni. During the season the BFI Shop will exclusively stock My Antonioni, a new publication featuring texts by Michelangelo Antonioni and edited by Carlo Di Carlo, who was a key collaborator and friend of the director.

The season will boast a rich and varied events programme that will allow audiences to explore Antonioni’s work in a myriad of ways. Michelangelo Antonioni: Chronicle of a Modernist’s Career will be an introductory talk from season curator Geoff Andrew, in which he discusses both Antonioni’s steady development of what became a highly distinctive style of cinematic storytelling, and the themes which preoccupied him over the years. There will also be a screening of Dear Antonioni (Gianni Massironi, 1997) a documentary portrait of the director featuring a star-studded array of interviewees including David Hemmings, Jack Nicholson and Vanessa Redgrave, while film philosophers Lucy Bolton, William Brown and John Ó Maoilearca will explore The Passenger through a philosophical lens in our regular PHILOSOPHICAL SCREENS series. There will be a discussion event Antonioni: The Plurality of Artistic Vision in which guest speakers will examine how Antonioni’s distinctive style was influenced by his interest in paintings, photography and visual culture more generally. A study day Landscape and Architecture in the Cinema of Michelangelo Antonioni will address how landscape and urban architecture became inseparable parts of Antonioni’s cinema and how he engaged with them to represent the challenges of modern life. Those wishing to delve even deeper into the director’s oeuvre will also be able to attend a six-session evening course Remaking the Image: An Introduction to the Work of Michelangelo Antonioni.

As well as screening all of Antonioni’s features, the season will also offer audiences a rare chance to see his short films on the big screen. In January the shorts programme Antonioni’s Short Films 1947-65 will feature early documentaries such as People of the Po Valley (1947), Seven Reeds, One Suit (1948) and The Funicular of Mount Faloria (1950), which are the closest the director came to neo-realism. In February the Shorts Programme 1983-2004 will feature landscapes, architecture and artworks in wordless documentaries Return to Lisca Bianca (1983), Sicilia (1997) and Roma (1989, from 12 Registi per 12 Città, made for the 1990 World Cup).
The season, which will run chronologically, will open with Antonioni’s first feature Chronicle of a Love Affair (aka Story of a Love Affair) (1950) in which a rich industrialist, provoked by groundless jealousy, hires a detective to investigate the past of the young woman he impulsively married several years earlier. Antonioni’s interest in fragile relationships between restless, intelligent women and insecure men is evident by his second feature, The Lady Without Camellias (1953). Lucia Bosé excels as a shopgirl-turned-movie star whose idolising but possessive producer husband has plans for her career. His next film – The Vanquished (1953) – comprises three episodes set respectively in Paris, Rome and London and is inspired by real-life apparently motiveless murders perpetrated by young ‘delinquents’. In Le amiche (1955), a young woman, back in Turin to open a fashion house, finds an unsuccessful suicide in an adjoining hotel room; the discovery leads to her taking up with a group of friends, and to one of Antonioni’s most astute and darkly ironic explorations of different attitudes towards love, life and work. Focused on a working-class protagonist, Il grido (1957) follows a factory worker though an impoverished, wintry Po Valley after his lover suddenly ends their affair.

Antonioni’s first collaboration with poet Tonino Guerra L’avventura (1960) extended his experiments with narrative: the sudden disappearance of a diplomat’s daughter while holidaying with friends in the Aeolian Islands is less the start of a mystery than of a cool dissection of the relationship that develops between her lover and her best friend as they search for her. L’avventura was the first in a loose trilogy and was followed by La notte (1961), which follows the lives of a married couple over the course of an afternoon and a night and L’eclisse (1962) which follows Vittoria, who has just ended her relationship with an older man, and Piero a-go-getting stockbroker who soon signals his interest in her. Antonioni’s fourth consecutive film with Vitti Red Desert (1964) cast her as a woman so distraught at an increasingly industrialised world that she turns for sympathy to a business associate of her husband. Perhaps the most daringly stylised of all the director’s films, it deploys a modernist score, expressionist colour and sound design, and striking shallow-focus compositions to suggest the protagonist’s emotional and psychological turmoil.

Persuaded by producer Carlo Ponti to make English-language films abroad, Antonioni turned his focus to social change, moral uncertainty and personal disillusionment. His first film made outside Italy, Blow up (1966), chronicles 24 hours in the life of a London fashion photographer played by David Hemmings, seemingly interested only in the perks of his career until an encounter with a woman in a park introduces mystery – and perhaps meaning – into his life. It was followed by Zabriskie Point (1970), which looks at contemporary campus unrest and social division in America; a student suspected of shooting a cop takes flight by stealing a plane, and in the desert encounters a young woman travelling to an appointment with her wealthy boss. Antonioni appears less interested in politics than in the look of America – the signage, landscapes and rampant consumerism. Antonioni’s final American film, The Passenger (1975) will be re-released by the BFI in selected cinemas on Friday 4 January; Jack Nicholson is excellent as a burnt-out political correspondent who impulsively exchanges identities with a businessman he finds dead in a North African hotel room. Suspense, intrigue, wit, ideas and visual beauty: this classic film has them all in spades.

Invited to film in China, Antonioni made China Chung Kuo – Cina (1972), a documentary triptych depicting daily life in Beijing, rural Henan and Suzhou, and Shanghai – only to incur the wrath of Mao. It is a fascinating work, happier to observe than comment, revelling in faces, places, architecture and movement. An intriguing experiment with new video technology of the time, The Oberwald Mystery (1980) is an adaptation of Cocteau’s play The Eagle Has Two Heads; it features Monica Vitti as a widowed queen whose solitary mourning is interrupted when an anarchist poet takes refuge in her castle. In Identification of a Woman (1982) a recently divorced filmmaker is searching not only for a new lover but for the female protagonist of his next movie; Antonioni revisits themes and motifs from earlier films, but with fresh touches of irony. Completing the season will be Beyond the Clouds (1995), about a filmmaker (John Malkovich) who is considering material for his next film, Beyond the Clouds, which was Antonioni’s last feature and was completed with the assistance of Wim Wenders, undoubtedly has moments of mysterious magic.
